Section 2 - Specific questions from the consultation

Topic	Please Provide Response Here
Question 1: How should the nameplate capacity of distribution systems, required by Rule 144A, be determined?	The capacity of a distribution network is determined by downstream network demand and is constantly changing with many variables. A nameplate capacity number is therefore very subjective and of little value in itself. However, whilst the idea of a nameplate capacity for a distribution network is only an artificial construct, the proposed aggregation of the nameplate capacities of all of the gate stations that feed the network is a reasonable and straightforward proxy measure for AEMO to set thresholds for the establishment of BB reporting obligations.
Question 2: How should the blend level, required by Rule 190G, be measured? AEMO is currently advocating the use of a %vol reporting requirement which is consistent with AS/NZS 4645.	AGIG agrees with AEMO's position.
